法 What is this anyway?

First, it is a collection of printable versions of Japanese zen sutras for tracing, chanting, learning or display in a variety of styles and fonts. See next page for examples.

法 And for those into LaTeX, a document preparation system

Some LaTeXcode for typesetting kanji texts – built with Japanese in mind.

Includes formats for tracing, reading (with or without meanings and readings), and display. From haiku to the heart sutra and beyond . . .

Examples are printable with different versions of the Four Bodhisattva Vows, The Heart Sutra, etc.

Documentation to help you build your own throughout.

Flashcards

The flashcards/ subdirectory contains a linux bash script that automates the production of flashcards from csv data files. The data file format, which is the result of the wanikani Item Inspector script settings listed below looks like so:

```
"とう",刀,"Sword"
"りょう",了,"Finish"
"しょう",少,"Few"
```

LaTeXrequirements: multicols, tcolorbox, xeCJK, anyfontsize, nopagno, xelatex, pdfpages (optional)

Wanikani item inspector settings:

  filter: kanji and vocabulary only columns: Reading Brief, Item, Meaning Brief

  cell separator => comma, use of quotes => only when needed

  my leeches

$#> cp yourFile.csv flashcards/
$#> cd flashcards
$#> chmod +x flash.sh      # if needed
$#> ./flash.sh yourFile    # no .csv extension!

What this script does is reformat the csv file, split it into sections that fit on a page, and combine these with the page templates `cards.tex` and `card-frame` to produce front and back pages in pdf format. Use a pdf reshuffler or the optional `remix.tex` file for semi-automated reshuffling of pages so fronts and backs are together. I still have to figure out how to automate the reshuffling of the card sheets.
